

LOCATION OF RIVER COL. ROOSEVELT
"PUT ON MAP."

Diagram shows Brazilian wilds, from which explorer recently returned, and situation of Rio Duero (River of Doubt), 1,000 miles long, "never before traversed by civilized man."

Roosevelt early today on his return here from Washington on the lecture he delivered there last night before the National Geographic Society, in which he officially announced the discovery of a heretofore unknown river in Brazil.

Col. Roosevelt planned to remain in town today, spending some time at his editorial work, where it was arranged to take his testimony in the suit brought in 1913 by Attorney Alex. T. Wales of Birmingham, N. Y., against John Mitchell.

CAPT. FRANK H. MASON
BADLY HURT BY FALL

Former Consul General Slips While Playing Golf on Chevy Chase Links.

Capt. Frank H. Mason, who recently resigned as consul general to Paris, while playing golf yesterday afternoon at the Chevy Chase Club with William J. Boardman, fell and injured his left leg, which necessitated an operation at Emergency Hospital, where he is now confined to his bed.

Capt. Mason, who served in the civil war, and who has been a member of the consular service for thirty-three years, arrived in Washington a few days ago with Mrs. Mason to visit Mr. and Mrs. Boardman at their home on B street. As he was making the rounds of the Chevy Chase course yesterday afternoon with Mr. Boardman, he slipped and fell at the eighth hole, where there are several steps, as he started to go down them.

The accident may delay Capt. Mason's departure for Paris, where he is scheduled to attend the international convention of chambers of commerce as a delegate of the Paris chamber.

He was unable to rise without assistance, found that he had lost the use of his limb, and was taken to Emergency Hospital, where Dr. Carr, the surgeon in charge, discovered that he had torn one of his leg muscles apart. It was seen together and Capt. Mason will be obliged to remain at the hospital under observation for a period. An unusual incident at the club when the accident occurred was the running of Mr. Boardman's automobile across the links, for the purpose of transporting the injured man to the grounds.

Progressives at Conference.

Fifteen of the twenty progressives of the House were present to extend the glad hand. They were Representatives Murdock of Kansas, Hinebaugh of Illinois, Nolan, Stephens and Bell of California, Chandler of New York, MacDonald and Woodruff of Michigan, Bryan and Falconer of Virginia, Kelly, Walters, Ruple and Hulings of Pennsylvania.

With the exception of his conference with the progressive congressmen, politics played little part in his day here. He was too busy for that. Reports that while here he might meet some republican leaders came to naught, for the colonel saw none of them. "Not a republican showed his face," he was laughing.

It was learned that before Col. Roosevelt left Oyster Bay a republican member of Congress telegraphed him asking for an appointment. Col. Roosevelt declined to discuss the matter, but it was understood that he felt too much already had been crowded into the day to permit of such a meeting.

Col. Roosevelt's visit with President Wilson was perhaps the most important of the day. The President and his predecessor spent more than half an hour together and talked over the situation of the country and the state of the world.

A good deal of the time was put in in telling stories. Col. Roosevelt told of his visit to the White House, where he had intended to go to his hotel to don more formal attire, but there was so much else to do that he had to give up that plan.

Displays Old-Time Vigor.

When the colonel arrived at the executive mansion he leaped out of his automobile with his old-time vigor and walked quickly into the White House, where the President was waiting to receive him in the red room.

The former President greeted warmly "Jimmie" Sloan, a secret service man, and other White House attaches who served during his administration.

"I'm very glad to see you," said the President, as he shook hands with Mr. Roosevelt. They had met before and before no introduction was necessary. Miss Belle Hagner, social secretary at the White House, who occupied a similar position during Roosevelt's administrations, and Secretary Tumulty were also present. After the exchange of greetings, the President led the way to the south porch of the White House, where the cool breezes from the Potomac tempered the heat. There, Roosevelt and the President talked over the situation of the country and the state of the world.

Speaking of travel, books and telling stories, the two men seemed to enjoy their meeting. Roosevelt's all controversial subjects were avoided, but the colonel himself mentioned the "river of doubt," which he discovered in Brazil, and joked over the controversy about it.

President Felicitates Kermit.

As he rose to leave Mr. Roosevelt inquired about the health of Mrs. Wilson, who is confined to her room, and the President asked particularly that the colonel convey congratulations to Kermit Roosevelt, who is to be married next month in Madrid. Then they shook hands warmly, and Col. Roosevelt walked quickly to his waiting machine.

A crowd of several hundred people had gathered inside the White House grounds, and as Col. Roosevelt appeared there was a burst of handclapping. President Wilson accompanied the colonel to the doorway, laughing and chatting with his distinguished visitor.

"It was a very pleasant social visit," said Col. Roosevelt after it was over.

On his arrival in Washington, Col. Roosevelt went first to the Smithsonian Institution. It was his first glimpse of the K. RICHARDSON & CO. building, which he had seen in the distance. As soon as he entered the building he caught sight of a huge rhinoceros in a glass case.

"I shot him," he exclaimed. "It was rather a close call, too. Kermit said: 'Wait a minute, dad, till I take his picture.' The rhinoceros was rushing at us, head down. 'I've got to shoot,' I protested. Kermit got his picture, and then I got the rhino."

For an hour the colonel wandered through the museum. There was supposed to be a reception committee, but it was lost in the crowd, and the colonel found the time to explain the fine points of specimens to those who happened to be nearest to him, and rattling off scientific words which no one understood.

Conference Behind Closed Doors.

At progressive headquarters last night Col. Roosevelt dictated his statement while the newspaper men were present. Afterward the doors were closed and he sat down for an informal discussion of political questions and to enjoy a cold bottle of milk and a sandwich. Victor Murdock, progressive leader in the House, outlined efforts the party has made there to enact the legislation demanded in their party's Chicago platform. Although he was interested in the prospects in the states of the men present, no definite plans were made for the fall campaign and the discussion was general in character.

Questions Sincerity of Doubters.

NEW YORK, May 27.—"If anybody doubts the existence of that river now his sincerity is open to question."
